Martin Tichnell House

Bloomington

Private

The Martin Tichnell House is a rectangular, one and a half story frame structure built in two main sections. The original structure is a four bay unit with two center doors. On its southeast endwall is a three bay, center door extension. A shed-roofed porch on a log post foundation extends the full length of the facade with a break at the seam between the two building sections. There is a one story shed addition at the rear that was built in three different sections, finally extending the full length of the house. The house rests on a log post foundation with stone reinforcement on the southeast endwall. Its exterior walls are covered with German siding and weatherboard. Windows are two over two sash with six over three sash on the facade second floor. Several six and two-pane casement windows light the rear additions and the southeast endwall. Also on the property are a springhouse, a frame bank barn, and a cellar/grain shed; the three built ca. 1910-20.

The Martin Tichnell House is located on the west side of Chestnut Grove Road approximately 2.2 miles south of Maryland Route 135. The facade of the house faces the road, pointing northeast.

The house is a rectangular, one and a half story frame structure built in two main sections. The original structure is a four bay unit with two center doors, the upper story having only two bays. On its southeast endwall is a three bay, center door extension also with a two bay upper story.

A shed-roofed porch on a log post foundation extends the full length of the facade with a break at the seam between the two building sections. The porch area belonging to the original structure has turned posts with brackets. The other section has plain square posts as supports.

There is a one story shed addition at the rear that was built in three different sections, finally extending the full length of the house.

The house rests on a log post foundation with stone reinforcement on the southeast endwall. Its exterior walls are covered with German siding on the rear, the southeast endwall and the first floor of the facade. Weatherboard covers the second floor facade and the northwest endwall. Windows are two over two sash with six over three sash on the facade second floor. Several six and two-pane casement windows light the rear additions and the southeast endwall.

The gable roof is covered with corrugated metal and has boxed rafter ends. A stovepipe emerges from the original structure on the eastern side of the ridgeline and a cinderblock flue is located at the center of the rear additions.

Also on the property are a springhouse, a frame bank barn, and a cellar/grain shed; the three built ca. 1910-20. A recent machine shed is included with the outbuildings.

The springhouse is situated southeast of the house with its batten door opening on the southwest side. It is a small rectangular building of balloon frame construction on a poured concrete foundation. The exterior is covered with board and batten siding and has a wood-shingled gable roof with an overhang at the entrance. The interior is lined with narrow horizontal boards laid flush.

The grainshed sits northwest of the house, opening on the northeast side. It has a coursed, roughly squared stone cellar with a gable-roofed, board and batten grainshed above. The machine shed is located southwest of this and consists of a simple vertical board, gable-roofed building on a cement block pier foundation.

The barn is located north of the house. It rests on a coursed stone foundation similar to that under the grainshed and has an earthen bank entrance on its west side. The barn is covered with vertical board siding and has a corrugated metal gable roof.
